

NACADA: The Global Community for Academic Advising stands with the faculty, staff and students at the Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) who have received threats of violence, including the first day of Black History Month for the U.S. As an Association whose membership spans the world across all types of higher education institutions, we are disturbed by the targeted efforts to intimidate and potentially harm those doing nothing more than pursuing their right to higher education. We appreciate the seriousness with which national and local authorities are investigating these threats and applaud the courage and grace demonstrated by students, faculty, and staff on HBCU campuses.
